Mrs. Tree Takes Jet

AMBASSADOR Marietta Tree, New York socialite who gave up her U.N. post during the changing of the guard following the death of Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson, is jetting around the world as a good-will ambassador for the U.S.

As an 'American specialist' serving without pay except for reimbursement of her travel expenses, the glamorous Mrs. Tree is lecturing and leading seminar discussions on long-handled topics such as: 'Developing Nationalism and Internationalism at the United Nations.'

Right now she is in Tokyo, on the first leg of a Far Eastern trip that will keep her busy at one-week lecture and seminar stands until late June.

She is sponsored by the State Department and follows on the heels of another former U.N. delegate, Mary Pillsbury Lord, who received her 'debriefing' last week on her return from a 12-week trip to the Far and Middle East.
